

Partnering Options

Battle Research Group is available to partner with academic, government, and private institutions to conduct military field research, to instruct on research methods, and to run workshops and tabletop exercises. Please contact info@battleresearchgroup.org to discuss partnering options with our team.

Collaborative Grant Partnerships

Team with us to conduct grant-funded military research. We will work directly with partners to conceptualize research projects, apply for grant funding, and to execute grants as part of a bilateral or multilateral team.

- Conceptualize and apply for partnered research grants
- Team with our expert field researchers and writers
- Publish with our in-house production designer
- Collaborate on post-production engagements, articles, and workshops

Grantor-Participant Partnerships

Grantors can partner with us to engage in research-supported workshops, public events, and publications. Our team will work with grantors to identify and avoid ethical conflicts related to interested-party engagement in research.

- Engage and partner directly with our experts
- Lead or participate in focused workshops, conferences, and exercises
- Co-author publications within interested-party ethical guidelines
- Team for public-facing engagements like podcasts and social media

Standing Partnerships

We are open to discuss development of a standing partnership with an academic, government, or private organization that directly supports military research—particularly military field research centered on the collection of primary source material—or to build a military history research instructional program.

- Build an enduring partnership for long-term research or instruction activities
- Depend on regular support from our experts
- Work together to periodically generate new research projects and products
- Amplify existing institutional capabilities or build a new, standing program
